SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1745.

Extract of a Private Letter from Cologne, dated June the 29th, 1745.

'THE Battle of Freyberg ſtill 'continues to engroſs the Con'verſation here; and though 'the Partizans of the Houſe 'of Auſtria endeavour to per'ſuade us that it was a mere 'Surprize, and that their De'feat was owing to the Irre'gularity of the Field of Battle, 'our Politicians cannot help 'looking upon the Thing in a different Light, and fear'ing that the Pruſſians will maintain their Superiority, 'at leaſt in all Set Battles; which may prove, at this 'Conjuncture, of fatal Conſequence to Germany. Such 'are of this Sentiment, are, for the moſt part, thoſe 'who have ſeen Service, and know perfectly well the 'Subject of which they ſpeak. In ſhort, they pretend 'that War is now reduc'd to a Syſtem; and that it is 'no very difficult Matter to argue thereupon with al'moſt Mathematical Certainty. I cannot pretend to be 'a competent Judge of this myſelf, but I ſend you a 'Specimen, for the Entertainment of the Military Cri'ticks in your Country; who will, no doubt, give it 'the Reception it deſerves.

'The common Opinion, ſay they, that the Pruſſians 'have a Superiority over the Auſtrians by their Fire, is 'founded in Truth; tho' the Reaſon they aſſign for it, 'is not ſo. They tell you, that the Auſtrians cannot 'fire above 14 Times; whereas the Pruſſians fire 18 or '20 Times in a Minute. Granting the Thing ſo, Ex'perience ſhews us, that the Conſequence they draw 'from it, will not follow; on the contrary, the Au'ſtrian Fire does rather more Execution than the Pruſ'ſians. This Superiority therefore is not to be ſought 'in the Number of Diſcharges, but in the Number of 'Pieces diſcharged; ſo that it is not that the Auſtrians 'are out-fired, but out-numbered.

'But when they advance this, it is not to be under'ſtood without ſome Explication; for it ſeems the 'Auſtrians may be, and have been out-numbered in a 'Battle by an inferior Army. To make this Paradox 'intelligible, let us ſuppoſe there are two Corps of Au'ſtrians and Pruſſians, each compoſed of 3000 Men; 'then, according to the Syſtem of the two Services, the 'latter will have no more than 2400, and the former '3600 Foot; from whence it will follow, that the 'Pruſſians will occupy a greater Space of Ground, and 'make their Fires with greater Force and Weight; the 'Conſequence of which need not be inſiſted on. But 'there is another Advantage attends this, which deſerves 'to be mentioned. The Pruſſians, by oppoſing an 'equal Fire, have an Opportunity of detaching a con'ſiderable Body of Grenadiers, or even whole Battalions, 'to fall upon the Auſtrians; and whenever we come to 'ſee diſtinct and impartial Relations of the late Battle 'in Silefia, it will undubitably appear, that the Advan'tage his Pruſſian Majeſty gain'd, was not owing to 'the ſuperior Courage of his Troops, or the extra'ordinary Conduct of his Generals, but to the vaſt Ad'vantage derived from this Syſtem of his, in regard to 'Diſcipline.

'To this we may add another Thing in his Favour, 'grounded on his Study of the Art of War, and a Re'flection he ſeems to have taken of making the Bulk 'of his People Soldiers; for, by giving Prizes for Shoot'ing, Boys from Ten Years old, and upwards, are con'ſtantly exercis'd therein; ſo that when Recruits are 'brought to his Army, they are complete in their Ex'erciſe in a few Days; whereas it is quite otherwiſe 'with the Forces brought to oppoſe him. This is a 'true Account of the Superiority or Weight of the 'Pruſſian Fire; and as to the Vulgar Opinion, it ariſes 'from the common Declarations of the Auſtrian Sol'diers, that they are borne down by the Pruſſian In'fantry; who having firſt thinned their Lines, as they 'muſt do by a warm Fire of an Hour, or an Hour and 'half, fall in upon them with Detachments of Grena'diers, as has been before obſerved; and ſo acquire a 'Victory rather by Skill than Courage; tho' there is 'no doubt, that two or three ſuch Actions as that of 'Freyberg, will give them likewiſe an extraordinary In'trepidity.

'It does not appear, at leaſt hitherto, that the Pruſ'ſian Troops in the Neighbourhood of Magdebourg 'are in Motion; which induces ſome People to think 'that there is a Treaty on Foot; but perhaps this may 'be better accounted for another Way. The King of 'Pruſſia keeps that Corps of Troops on the Frontiers 'of Saxony, not ſo much with a View of invading 'that Country, which might very poſſibly draw upon 'him new Enemies, as to hinder an Polish Majeſty from 'ſending any large Corps to reinforce the Army in Bo'hemia, or to march, as he was inclined to do, a Body 'of 12,000 Men into the Empire. Conſider'd therefore 'in this Light, the Troops canton'd about Magdebourg 'actually anſwer his Purpoſe as well as if they were in 'the Field, and perhaps better; becauſe they do their 'Buſineſs without being expoſed to the Fortune of War. 'We are told, that he has lately received a new Subſidy 'from France; and has been moreover promiſed a pow'erful Diverſion in his Favour, before the Concluſion 'of the enſuing Month; but how that Promiſe will be 'kept, Time only can diſcover.'

Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World is a Work of ſo vaſt a Compaſs, ſuch endleſs Variety, that no Genius, but one adventurous as his own, durſt have undertaken that great Deſign. I do not apprehend any great Difficulty in collecting and common-placing an Univerſal Hiſtory from the whole Body of Hiſtorians; that is nothing but mechanic Labour. But to digeſt the ſeveral Authors in his Mind, to take in all their Majeſty, Strength, and Beauty, to raiſe the Spirit of meaner Hiſtorians, and to equal all the Excellencies of the beſt, is Sir Walter's peculiar Praiſe. His Style is the moſt perfect, the happieſt, and moſt beautiful, of the Age he wrote in; majeſtic, clear, and manly; and he appears every where ſo ſuperior, rather than unequal to his Subject, that the Spirit of Rome and Athens ſeems to be breathed into his Work.
